

Seren
Y9 aged 13

Should voluntary euthanasia be made legal in Britain?

I talk from personal experience. That's all I have. My cousin Ben is twenty-four. He's lived longer than most of us in this room. But he has cerebral palsy and this limits his everyday life. He can't eat, sleep, or talk, or walk. This limits him. It's a great strain on his family and on mine as well. I looked after him for six weeks and believe me – it's tough. And he can see that in himself. God gave us free will to decide what we have to. But this has been taken away by him for the law. He doesn't want to live anymore. And so his family think committing euthanasia would be a good thing for him.

"He can't eat, sleep, or talk, or walk"